

4710 University Way NE, Suite 100 • Seattle, WA 98105-4427

Phone (206)473-0630 • RedLetterPress@juno.com • www.RedLetterPress.org • Facebook: Red Letter Press Books

Editorial Office • 5018 Rainier Ave. S., Seattle, WA 98115

News Release

February 27, 2019

Contact: Helen Gilbert, Book Promotions
Office: 206-985-4621
Cell: 206-473-0630

For Release: Immediately

High Voltage Women* tells the story of groundbreaking electrical tradeswomen

High Voltage Women: Breaking Barriers at Seattle City Light, by Ellie Belew. Red Letter Press, 2019, Seattle. $20.00, 224 pages, paperback, photos, notes, index, ISBN: 978-0-932323-34-7. Release date: March 1, 2019 - Women's History Month.

In High Voltage Women: Breaking Barriers at Seattle City Light, labor historian Ellie Belew captures the drama, the events, and the personalities of a landmark affirmative action effort in the electrical trades that began in Seattle in the early 1970s. The extensively researched account covers 25 years of city politics and combined union and civil rights activism. Belew's other works include Fully Involved: A History of the Washington State Council of Firefighters (2004) and Bringing Power to the People (2013), the history of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers Local #77.

Through interviews and original source material, Belew tells the story of women's fight to gain entry into the male, largely white, electrical trades at Seattle's publicly owned utility. As part of the Electrical Trades Trainee (ETT) program, ten female pioneers put their bodies on the line to implement affirmative action in the face of life-threatening sexism and racism. Some saw the trades mostly as a means to a better paycheck. But other, more radical, participants sought to build alliances with men of color, white male union members, and office staff to change the culture of discrimination at City Light and in the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), Local 77. Their battle took many turns through union grievances, discrimination charges, on-the-job injuries, and notable victories. The initial coordinator of the women's program was Clara Fraser, a gutsy feminist who the Seattle Post-Intelligencer called "Seattle's grande dame of socialism." Fraser fought and won her own long-running discrimination case against the utility with substantial support from labor.

High Voltage Women offers insights into early Seattle battles for racially integrated job sites. It explores the role of feminists in Seattle's social justice and labor movements of the 1970s and '80s. It examines the record of city politicians and managers, notable labor and community leaders, and key organizations including Radical Women, the Ad Hoc Committee for Fair Employment and Open Housing, and the Committee for Equal Rights at City Light.

Today, City Light remains embroiled in controversy as Seattle Silence Breakers, a local manifestation of the #MeToo movement, shines light on sexual harassment and discrimination in city employment. But some significant changes have come about including IBEW #77's support for the book and Business Manager Louis Walter paying tribute to the "ten brave and daring women [who] met with relentless resistance and overwhelming challenges that tested their minds and their bodies but never broke their spirit."

High Voltage Women can be ordered from www.RedLetterPress.org and other book sellers.

# #

Author Ellie Belew and several of the tradeswomen profiled in the book are available for interviews. Contact Red Letter Press to make arrangements.