

As a young girl, Nancy Reiko Kato learned activism from her parents who involved her in community organizing such as the huge mobilization to save the International Hotel in downtown San Francisco.

A unionist and a fighter against racism and fascism, Nancy embodies the multi-issue radical politics she speaks out for in this essay. She has served as both Bay Area and National Organizer for Radical Women.

Radical Women Publications

<http://www.redletterpress.org/rwpubs.html>